David Block was recently brought into the Mitigation Bureau this December. David’s zeal for emergency management stemmed from his previous experiences in environmental conservation working with the U.S. Department of the Interior, where he developed a critical awareness of the relationship between people and their environment with regards to disaster. David will be graduating from the MPA program at Florida State University this December, and is excited to begin his career in emergency management and mitigation with the Florida Division of Emergency Management. David looks forward to bridging gaps among stakeholders and bringing communities closer together in helping to ensure the resiliency of Floridians from the threat of disaster. When he is not planning for emergencies, David can often be found in his kayak exploring the natural beauty of Florida.
